

On Disrespect

Part I

By Ciarán Handley

17th September 2018

On Disrespect

Chapter 1

Nook

Slí Éamon de Buítléar, the cliff walk I take, is a place I go to connect to nature in stillness

It is a place of outstanding natural beauty. Recently in walking this path I found a name “Nook” sprawled in spray-paint graffiti in a number of locations over about a half-mile of path, including the location in the photo above.

I go to this place for stillness of mind, yet I find when I arrive now that I feel anger at the hooligan who has defaced this place. It is the level of disrespect show by this hooligan.

In Golden Age we need Knights. Hooligans such as this person who spray-paints the name “Nook” should be named and shamed. There is no place for such disrespect of nature walks in Golden Age.

To deface a place with graffiti is always to do with disrespect, unless a section of wall has been specifically assigned as a mural. No-one who was respectful would deface in such a way.

If a person is disrespectful with graffiti, that person will be disrespectful in life. For one cannot be respectful to people and other things if one is disrespectful of nature.

It is a mindset. A common mindset.

But that does not make it normal.

On Golden Age

Chapter 1

What will your civilisation stand for?

Civilization IV Trailer

On Disrespect

End of Part I